Meet your new Mayor

It's a real honour and privilege to take over the reins as the new Mayor of Randwick City. I live and work in Maroubra and volunteer as a lifesaver at Maroubra Beach.

My parents instilled in me the importance of public service from an early age, so being able to serve the community as Mayor is a proud time for me.

Former Mayor Danny Said did an excellent job with the role and I'd like to thank him for his service to our community – we have been lucky to have him for the past two years.

We've all gone through a challenging period with the recent lockdown but we've stuck together throughout.

During this time, Council was able to support the South East Sydney Local Health District as they worked to quickly arrange for testing clinics to be made available in areas with high COVID-19 case numbers and organise vaccination hubs to distribute vaccines.

It was, and continues to be, a massive effort. This issue of Scene is our way of acknowledging all of that work and how much we appreciate the people behind it. As the son of a nurse, I know how valuable our frontline workers are.

Over the next few weeks I look forward to helping our community to reopen safely and see our cafés, restaurants, community sports and charitable organisations get back to doing what they do best.

More broadly, I'm passionate about bringing energy to our nightlife, protecting our green spaces and securing real affordable housing.

I look forward to meeting you out and about. I hope you enjoy this edition of Scene Magazine.

Helping hand for businesses going plastic free

A fulltime project officer will be employed to help make Randwick City plastic free under a partnership between Council and the Boomerang Alliance – a not-for-profit environmental organisation running a national Plastics Free Program. The new role will work with local cafes and food outlets to help them replace or find alternatives to single use plastics.

Opposition to State Government plan to divert levies

Randwick City Council is one of 23 metropolitan councils who have launched a campaign demanding the NSW Government abandon its plan to divert local government funds into State revenue. The NSW Government is attempting to take up to half of local government “developer contributions” – the money councils levy developers to help pay for local infrastructure such as playgrounds, sports fields, libraries and parks. The councils published an open letter in the Sydney Morning Herald and Daily Telegraph, to raise public awareness of the detrimental impact this levy change will have on their communities, arguing that developer levies should be spent where they are raised to ensure new development is accompanied by appropriate investment in the surrounding area.

Local Government elections in December

The local government elections, which were originally due to be held at the beginning of September, have been moved to Saturday 4 December 2021, so don’t forget to update your calendar! Councils that elected a Mayor and Deputy Mayor in 2019, which includes Randwick Council, held elections in September 2021. Randwick Councillors elected Dylan Parker as Mayor and Lindsay Shurey as Deputy Mayor at an Extraordinary Council Meeting on 30 September. They will serve until new Mayoral elections can be held after the Council elections on 4 December 2021. The 15 local Councillors, who are currently in place, will remain in their position until the new elections take place on 4 December 2021.

SYDNEY FILM FESTIVAL

SFF comes to the Ritz

Randwick Council will again support the Sydney Film Festival, which will screen a number of feature films and documentaries at the Ritz Cinema. The festival runs from November 3 -14, 2021. Council has sponsored the event since 2017 helping cement Randwick’s reputation as an iconic locality for cinema and the arts. Head to www.sff.org.au for the full program of dramas, documentaries, thrillers, comedies, cross-genre experiments and art-house cinema from around the world.

Matraville Incinerator stack in doubt

A proposal to build an incinerator at a paper mill in Matraville has been thrown into doubt, thanks to a new State Government plan that bans energy from waste projects in the Sydney basin. SUEZ and Opal plan to build a waste to energy facility to power the paper mill with a 60m high stack that would burn 165,000 tonnes of rubbish a year just 130 metres from homes. But the NSW Government Energy from Waste Infrastructure plan proposes to ban waste to energy facilities in the Sydney basin, unless they’re replacing the use of coal or petroleum-based fuels at an industrial site. In the case of the Opal Matraville Paper Mill, the facility already uses natural gas to power the plant which is typically regarded as a cleaner fuel source than burning coal or waste. This new plan provides a flicker of hope for worried Matraville residents and everyone in the eastern suburbs who is concerned about the plan to build an incinerator.

Waiting to host games again.

Coogee grandstand complete

The new look Coogee Oval grandstand and amenities have recently been unveiled. The grandstand was the oldest building within the oval boundary, and was constructed in 1924. The refurbishment to the grandstand and the amenities block now ensures Coogee Oval can continue to function as a first-class sporting facility. Although we’re unable to have an official opening due to COVID-19 restrictions, we are pleased this facility will be ready for sporting fixtures and competitions once restrictions are lifted.

No Carols for 2021

We were sad to announce recently that Coogee Carols has been cancelled for a second consecutive year. In its place, Council will instead host a range of smaller Christmas and summer activations spread across Randwick City town centres, similar to ones installed in 2020. The difficult decision was made due to the ongoing lockdown and uncertainty surrounding future restrictions. You can read more about what is in store on page 12 and 13.

Council raises concerns about La Perouse Ferry Wharf Proposal

Randwick Council has raised concerns about a Transport for NSW proposal to reinstate ferry wharfs at La Perouse and Kurnell. The old La Perouse wharf was destroyed by a storm in 1974. Council has lodged a submission indicating that sufficient concerns exist to warrant the proposal not being supported in its current form. These concerns include potential negative impacts on the marine environment and recreational users such as fishers, divers, snorkelers, kayakers and swimmers.

Streets made of glass

New and repaved roads and footpaths in Randwick City will be made using recycled glass as a substitute for sand. Randwick joined with 15 other councils to drive a new age of sustainable road making as part of the Procure Recycled: Paving the Way initiative. This is expected to recycle more than 80 million glass bottles per year, which will be used in local roads. The move will also help reduce greenhouse gas emissions and will be equivalent to planting 14,000 trees per year. While most kerbside glass is currently recycled back into bottles, Paving the Way will locally recycle all remaining glass that’s not fit for making bottles.

On the home front

Locally, we had COVID-19 testing clinics popping up at key locations when they were most needed, allowing us to keep our testing rates high so we could track, trace and isolate if necessary. So what has the pandemic looked like for the frontline workers behind the masks and face shields? Let's find out.

Patient Molly high fives Justin after receiving her test.

When COVID-19 appeared on our shores, our health system had to act quickly. For the South Eastern Sydney Local Health District (SESLHD), that meant setting up testing clinics across the region as quickly as possible.

One of the first COVID-19 assessment clinics established was at Prince of Wales Hospital (POWH) on Avoca Street in Randwick. A walk-in clinic, the location used to be a diabetes testing clinic, but due to having its own entry and an outdoor area where people could queue, the diabetes clinic was moved to a different location so this could become a COVID-19 testing clinic.

For Jan Estigoy, working at the clinic has been her way of life since it opened. "I used to work in anaesthetics, but I transferred to the casual pool where I have been working in the COVID-19 assessment clinic when it opened in March 2020," she says.

Having been at the clinic for more than a year and having worked at a vaccine clinic too, Jan has a unique perspective on the pandemic.

"I've had the opportunity to experience and see how COVID-19 has affected our whole community. I see what happens in health care and how it impacts our staff, our patients and our families," she says. "It's been a very challenging time and for everyone and it has taken a toll emotionally."

“It's been a very challenging time and for everyone and it has taken a toll emotionally”

Yet this hasn't stopped Jan from choosing to work in the thick of things. Jan has also worked at the outreach clinic, which is part of the Sydney Children's Hospital, and visits COVID-positive patients in their homes. "I did a shift with a doctor, where we reviewed patients in their homes and took their swabs. It's a long day driving all around Sydney, working overtime and sometimes having no breaks," says Jan, who knows it's all part of working in her chosen field during a pandemic.

For Jan, the important message to the general public is: "I know it's hard, but the more we persevere now with the restrictions, hand hygiene and social distancing, the better it will be in the long-term."

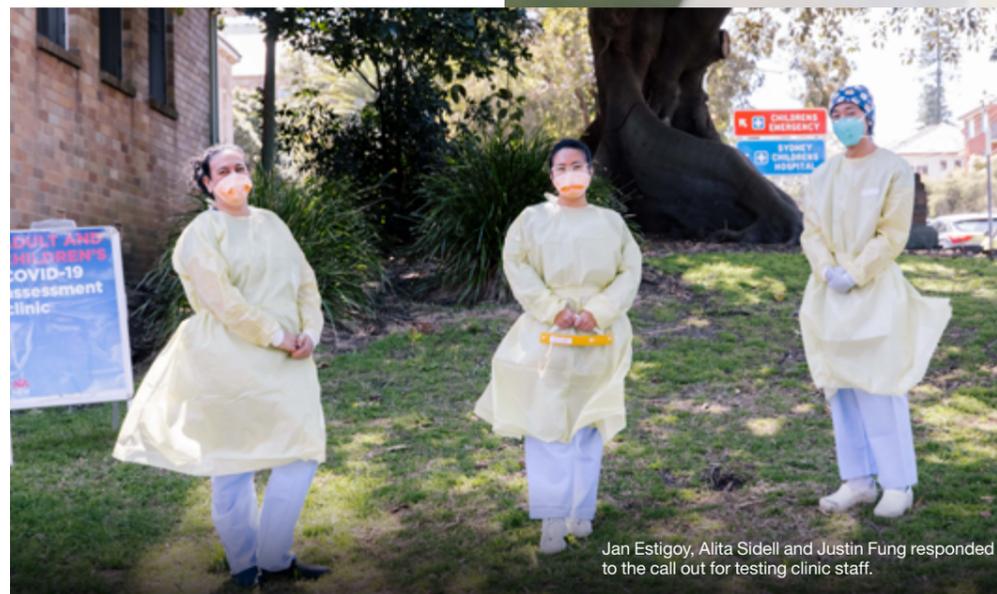

Justin and Alita work alongside Jan in the assessment clinic at POWH. Alita works in administration, while Justin is a nurse. "As an admin worker, it's my responsibility to check everyone in, make sure their details are correct, and get them in and out as quickly and safely as possible," explains Alita.

Cleaning and wiping and cleaning again is part and parcel of the work that takes place in a COVID assessment clinic. "We wipe down any furniture, door handles, and any frequently touched items very regularly," says Alita.

Cleaning and wiping is all in a day's work for Justin, too. "After each patient has their test, we wipe down the surfaces they may have touched, the chairs they sat in, the desk they leaned on," he says. It's repetitive, draining work, but it must be done thoroughly to keep people safe, and all while wearing extensive personal protective equipment, known as PPE.

"I feel safe wearing the PPE – we're in gowns, gloves and mask as well as face shield or goggles, but it's cumbersome," explains Alita. "If we leave for a bathroom break or go to the tearoom, we have to change it all every time and it can be hot, too. But I feel safer at work than at the supermarket!"

Jan Estigoy, Alita Sidell and Justin Fung responded to the call out for testing clinic staff.

Around 500 people go through the clinic each day, getting tested for COVID. "It can be hard on some people – children are hard or language barriers can make it difficult to explain what we're going to do," explains Justin. But for the most part, Justin says if he breaks it down into small steps, he can get most people to understand.

“Social distancing, regular and thorough handwashing and wearing a mask are becoming a more natural part of our lives”

"COVID is part of our lives now and I think it has made everyone more aware," says Alita. "Social distancing, regular and thorough handwashing and wearing a mask are becoming a more natural part of our lives," she says. But the most important message: Get vaccinated!

Handle with care

Vaccinating a nation is a challenge, sure, but how do you reach people who don't speak the language, can't leave home or have a fear of needles? The folks at the Hub @ Lexo know it can be done when you know your community and show you care.

On a Friday morning in Maroubra a man with a fear of needles – let's call him Pete – presents at the vaccination hub that has been set up on Lexington Place. The last time he rolled up his sleeve for a jab he accidentally punched the doctor, he tells the staff at Lexo. He's still extremely anxious about receiving his COVID-19 vaccination and wants to do it for his community but also wants to know if there is a way he can do it safely, with no punches thrown.

Boy, did he come to the right place!

Maroubra is a beautiful suburb with one of Sydney's best surfing beaches, but it's also an area that experiences some disadvantage. With poor public transport and a high level of social housing and homelessness, some residents require a bit of extra care and support, particularly when it comes to accessing health services.

In July this year, recognising there was a community in need, South Eastern Sydney Local Health District (SESHLD) approached Council with the idea to set up a hub that would allow vulnerable people – those with low income, or who experience mental health issues or drug and alcohol dependencies – as well as the local Aboriginal community, to receive their COVID-19 vaccine in a supportive space.

"For many years we've been providing services using an outreach model, setting up programs in inner city locations and going into places where disadvantaged communities are, at the times that they're there," says Gary Gahan who works at Kirketon Road Centre, a health care service that is part of the SESHLD.

The space they identified, affectionately known as the Hub @ Lexo, was already operating as a health service provider but with a few adjustments became a Pfizer vaccination clinic, jointly run by The Kirketon Road Centre (KRC), St Vincent's Hospital and Council.

Typically, the Hub provides free support to locals across a wide range of services including health, housing, social and family support. It's a joint project between Council, SESHLD, Department of Community and Justice and Deli Women's and Children's Centre.

A quick rearrangement of the internal space to make it COVID-safe, a few approvals provided by Council and a reshuffle of some KRC rosters meant that by late August, there was a team of clinical nurses, health educators, counselling and administration staff and Aboriginal health workers at Lexo from 10am until 2pm every Friday, vaccinating the community.

"When we started the program we were very clear that it was for people in social housing, people that were homeless or at risk of homelessness, Aboriginal community members or people with chronic care concerns that would have made it more difficult for them to access vaccination through mainstream centres," Gary explains. "So it was important for us when we started the program that we didn't publicise it too widely because we wanted to provide access for those priority groups."

Initially, this meant letting people know about the service through word of mouth, text messages to specific community members and knocking on the right doors to make sure word got around.

"I can't speak highly enough of the staff down at Lexo, they're such a great community asset"

"I can't speak highly enough of the staff down at Lexo, they're such a great community asset," Gary continues. "They really care for their community and they're so well connected. It's great to have a big health roadshow roll up but without that local connection it wouldn't have worked properly."

The next group of people that Lexo want to make sure they get in touch with are those who find it difficult to access services because of mobility issues, whether that's because of physical impediments or issues arising from poor mental health or drug and alcohol dependencies.

"The Central & Eastern Sydney Primary Health Network has set up a new scheme that will allow vaccinations in the home, which is an important new program," says Gary. "We've been able to do a small number of vaccinations in the home for people who are unable to leave the house. And, again, the role of the Lexo staff in facilitating that has just been superb. They've come to us with details of community members and we've been able to get the vaccine to them in their homes."

This focus on addressing each person's individual needs has been a hallmark of the vaccination clinic at Lexington. "It's very important to us that people feel welcome," Gary confirms.

People who have turned up but felt unable to wait in line because they are elderly, have young children with them or feel agitated are well taken care of by staff and often taken through the process sooner. If there are language barriers, a translation service is available to go through the forms and help discuss any concerns. And people who have a fear of needles? They get looked after too.

"We took Pete into a quiet waiting area, had a chat with him and asked what he'd like us to do. He said he'd like us to hold his arms by his side, which we did while distracting him with a conversation. The nurse stood behind him the whole time so he never saw the needle and by doing that we were able to get him vaccinated without him really noticing."

The week after his first jab, Pete returned to the clinic, this time with his daughter and her puppy with him. "He wanted to say hello," says Gary. "I think he was really happy he'd had a positive experience with us."

Stories like this aren't uncommon at Lexo, which has been set up specifically to give staff the opportunity to meet people's needs because, as Gary points out, "Everybody needs the vaccine. No matter how difficult it is, everybody needs it."

Smells Like School Spirit

When an entire primary school is ordered into isolation, the true spirit of a community comes shining through. For South Coogee Public School, there was no doubt that care and support were the order of the day.

On a cold June morning Trish Fisher, the principal of South Coogee Public School received a call from NSW Health, letting her know that four students had tested positive for COVID-19, which required all 550 students at the school and their families to isolate for two weeks. In a further twist of fate, all this was happening just as school holidays were about to begin.

The school was prepared for such an eventuality, Trish says, but the task of ensuring that families had basic needs met and kids were kept entertained was enormous, to say the least.

“Ensuring our families and staff had supplies and activities was my first priority,” she explains. “I was grateful to our P&C for taking the lead in supporting our community. They took the initiative to reach out and find ways to support each other.”

Facebook groups and What’s App chats were flooded with offers of help to run errands or deliver food as school families navigated their way through the challenges of isolating and keeping kids entertained. One call was from Randwick Council GM Therese Manns to Jodie Steele, President of the P&C, asking if there was anything that Council could do to help families that might need a bit of extra support.

The answer was a resounding yes!

“We were mindful about how we were going to keep kids entertained for two weeks without going outside,” she says. “The fact they couldn’t catch up with friends was a big thing for them to comprehend. Additionally, there were concerns around how to access food and other supplies, as when you go into isolation there is no real warning.”

“Online shopping sometimes had no delivery times available, and if you didn’t have local family or friends who could deliver essential items, this created an additional stress.”

Through many discussions with the school and P&C, Council was able to arrange for 45 care packages, which contained a combination of games and activity packs, food supplies and data packs, to be delivered to families that needed additional support.

Genevieve Calabro, from the Des Renford Leisure Centre (DRLC) and Barbara Todes from our libraries, identified various games, craft material and books that would offer much needed distraction for kids and offered online activities as well.

“The focus was on activities that the children could do with limited assistance and using things from the recycle bin or found in the backyard,” Genevieve says.

“We had the Mayor come and read a story one day and different DRLC staff offered any skill that we could transfer into a Zoom session,” she explains. “This included balloon animals, dancing, cooking, face painting, sign language, reading stories, meditation, juggling, netball skills and 101 different craft ideas.”

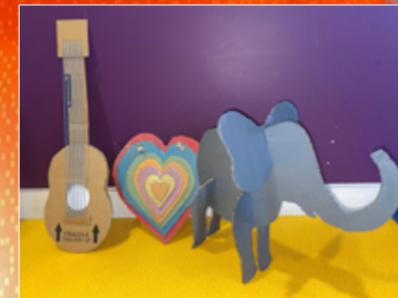

“The families were extremely grateful and thankful for the support in what was already a stressful time,” says Jodie. “Particularly those in apartments who had no outdoor space to utilise, with sometimes multiple children to try and entertain. The data packs helped some families get online and be able to interact with their friends, as well as join in the daily Zoom activities put on by the fantastic DRLC staff.”

The school also ensured there was a focus on keeping up everyone’s spirits during the challenging time. “Events were organised for the children including a virtual school disco and for our staff, online activities to keep morale high.”

By July, once it became clear that at-home learning was going to be the norm for the following few months, Council extended an invitation to all schools in the LGA to access the Zoom and Facebook Live activity and exercise sessions.

“The program was a great addition to the teaching and learning programs offered by schools,” says Trish who shared session details with other local principals.

“I am so grateful to the Randwick City Council team for supporting us and being part of bringing our community together during a time when our school and local community needed it most.”

“They took the initiative to reach out to the community and find ways to support each other.”

Bring on the holly days!

Christmas is a time of joy and wonder, so this year we have a Santa sackful of beautiful, heart-lifting decorations and activations all wrapped up just for you. This will be a summer to celebrate the festive season, each other and the place we call home.

In 2020, on the cliffs overlooking Clovelly, a 10-foot-tall ice cream sculpture, dropped upside down on the grass in Bundock Park, twinkled and sparkled in the dusk beckoning people to walk through it and experience a small moment of lighted-heartedness and wonderment. In a year like 2020, moments like that were to be treasured!

Keep an ear out for buskers this summer.

It was part of the many Christmas and summer surprises that we sprinkled throughout Randwick City to celebrate the festive season and lift people's spirits. They were a reminder that although many things had changed that year there were some things that would stay the same, such as our desire for joint experiences to bring us together.

If you were fortunate enough to catch someone else's eye after they had admired the Christmas ornaments on streetlamps in Randwick, or the decorative tree wraps in Little Bay or see Santa's Elves ride their "hot air balloon" through Maroubra, you would have felt that moment of connection and togetherness.

This year there will be many similar opportunities to celebrate Christmas throughout December and summer in January as well as the strength and resilience our community has shown these past (nearly) two years.

Roaming Christmas entertainment will be back this year.

We'll host music pop-ups and roaming entertainment in many of our town centres over the coming months and install Christmas, New Year and summer-themed 3D chalk art that you can safely interact with.

There will be Christmas decorations, tree wrappings in parks and lights to brighten the evenings as well as our Christmas Light Trail. If you are a business or resident with grand plans to add some twinkle to your space, let us know so we can include you on our map.

Christmas decorations will be found all throughout our LGA.

Keep an eye on our website to find our Christmas photobooth, which will allow you to take a photo and turn it into a physical or digital postcard that you can send to loved ones, letting them know you're thinking of them.

Throughout the summer months we will also continue our Eat, Drink, Play food truck program, which means tasty food and outdoor enjoyment will be easy to find on weekends.

To find out all the ways we'll be making spirits bright this year, head to our website or keep an eye on our social media. There's no place like home for the holidays.

December 2021 marks the 20th Anniversary of the much-loved Coogee Carols and we are planning something special for the community to celebrate this monumental milestone in a safe way.

Planning for our largescale community events like Coogee Carols happens months in advance.

This year, the Public Health Orders (which determine if and how large events can be held) were not available when they were needed, and as such we had to make the difficult decision to cancel Carols and start planning other ways we might be able to celebrate. We love this festive community event as much as residents do and we're hopeful that it will be back in all its glory in 2022.

Worth the wait

It's not an easy thing, to call Australia home if you were born overseas. Throw in a global pandemic and it becomes even more challenging. But for a few patient residents, the wait has paid off with our citizenship ceremonies now being held online while restrictions are in place.

With her teacup staffy cross, Ozzie, by her side Ekaterina clicked in to a Zoom meeting, joined 22 others and 30 minutes later became an Australian Citizen. It sounds simple, but the path to becoming an Australian citizen, particularly during a pandemic, is a long and challenging one.

It starts with becoming a permanent resident, applying to become a citizen, successfully completing the Australian citizenship test, and finishes with a pledge at an official citizenship ceremony overseen by a presiding officer, usually the Mayor. It can take many years, and there is usually a 6-month wait for an in-person ceremony

For Ekaterina, who had moved from Russia to Australia 13 years ago, it was the obvious next step for her. "When a country becomes a home, it's a natural choice," she says.

Randwick City Council ordinarily holds in-person ceremonies once per month for just over 100 people, but when the Greater Sydney lockdown hit earlier this year, ceremonies were temporarily suspended. Council started hosting these ceremonies virtually in September, beaming in the Mayor, local Members of Parliament and new citizens via Zoom meetings.

"In this current situation, it felt like the process was taking forever, so when the opportunity came to have an online citizenship ceremony I didn't think twice, I just said yes," Ekaterina says. "As much as I wanted to have the ceremony face-to-face, I didn't know how much longer that was going to take. I think it was the right decision to make."

In preparation for the virtual ceremonies, lists of those citizens next in line are provided by the Department of Home Affairs and each new citizen is contacted directly by Council staff.

Arrangements are made to have a private meeting to verify their identity before they join a larger group of conferees to say their pledge of commitment to Australia with the Mayor.

Each person must complete the entire pledge out loud, whilst Council staff watch to ensure it's happening, meaning that only small groups can be done at each ceremony – partially restricted by the maximum number of windows that can be displayed on Zoom at any one time!

" I had tears when I said the pledge. It was so emotional, it makes you feel like you have been accepted by your country. "

"I think having the ceremony is really important. After so many years living in this country I had tears when I said the pledge. It was so emotional, it makes you feel like you have been accepted by your country, if I can put it in those simple words," says Ekaterina.

In the first month alone, Council welcomed 230 new citizens virtually. Families joined in from across their homes in Randwick, plenty dressing up for the special occasion and proudly displaying their Australian flags and raising a beer or champagne in celebration, even at 10am. What a way to celebrate becoming an Aussie!
